Assistant Head of School for Academics and Inclusive Excellence

The Agnes Irwin School (AIS) invites nominations and applications for the position of Assistant Head of School for Academics and Inclusive Excellence.

Since the School’s founding in 1869, AIS has dedicated itself to providing an exceptional and empowering education for girls. Rooted in academic excellence, community, and collaboration, AIS consistently tailors its programs to the distinctive and individual needs of girls, always holding fast to the principle that a girl’s educational journey from childhood through graduation should be joyful, challenging, creative, and inspirational. Located on a beautiful campus in Philadelphia’s Main Line suburbs, AIS students and faculty benefit from access to the comprehensive cultural, educational, environmental, and industry resources that the Philadelphia area provides.

Enrolling nearly 600 girls in pre-kindergarten through grade 12, AIS is a leader in all-girls education, using research-based practices to provide the best possible experience for students. The student-to-faculty ratio is 6:1, which allows for an understanding of individual student interest, personal development, and skill enhancement.

Reporting to and partnering with Head of School Sally Keidel, the Assistant Head of School for Academics and Inclusive Excellence will be a collaborative leader who empowers students, faculty, and staff toward realizing common goals in a student-centered environment. Operating as an entrepreneurial thought partner, the Assistant Head will engage in strategic decisions that enhance the student academic experience. The role will work to further efforts prioritized in recent years: igniting curiosity and creativity within AIS students, energizing and empowering faculty, and enriching the AIS community by demonstrating a commitment to inclusive excellence. This position will support the development and implementation of the strategic planning process, which launched in Fall 2021. The Assistant Head of School will help lead AIS forward by supporting curriculum development and co-curricular programming, promoting equity and inclusive excellence as guiding principles in the curriculum and campus culture, advancing professional development programs, and overseeing the research and programs of the Center for the Advancement of Girls.
